Not illustrated. 1853 edition. Excerpt: .became the pupil of Rembrandt. His pictures are chiefly remarkable for their harmony of color. He died in 1674. 92. The Continence of Scipio. This picture tells, in a Dutch way, the well-known story of Scipio's continence and generosity. The victorious and self-denying general stands upon a stone platform, surrounded by his officers and attendants. At the foot of the steps leading to the platform, kneel the lovers, surrounded by their friends; and in the background are other less fortunate captives, and the victorious army. A stronghold forms the background of the composition. The anachronism of the introduction of Dutch faces and the old Dutch costume in the treatment of this tale of classic Rome, strikes the eye ludicrously enough, but cannot blind it to the character and expression of the figures, and the rich and harmonious color of the picture....
