Excerpt: .importance, for its own consumption, and the limited interior trade. Its principal exports are now almost confined exclusively to deals, battens, and balks, and a little flax and hemp. Their bill-negotiations are all transacted at Petersburgh, where it would be better for merchants in England to fix a credit, than to be drawn upon direct; for, as they must at Narva be governed by the Petersburgh exchange, where they send their bills to be negotiated, they fix a higher rate than that course, in order to indemnify themselves in case of a rise at Petersburgh. Merchants should have their money remitted from thence. Their weights were shippounds, lispounds, and pounds, but now they are falling into the Petersburgh mode. The following table will shew the amount of the trade of each year at this place. I Years. Ships, Imports.
